deaths from most flu varieties are 0.1 % (1 in 1000) and that hasn't changed in a long time. Also (unfortunately) the Spanish flu is much deadlier - the "Spanish flu" of 1918-1919. That had one especially scary aspect - the death rate among soldiers in the trenches. The death rate from the Spanish flu isn't known because the record-keeping was so poor. Estimates are "from 1 to 5% of the population" and it is also interesting. It definitely didn't start in Spain. But most European nations were under wartime rate as close to 3.4%. Yikes!!
